Everybody's Talking!

Hummingbird friends: Melanie Barboni, a geology researcher at the University of California, Los Angeles (US), loves hummingbirds. To attract the colorful little birds to her office window, she hung a feeder, and soon her first feathered friend appeared. Since then, she has added three more feeders that attract over 200 of the birds. She is convinced that they remember her, and she has named about 50 of them. Some drink nectar right out of her hand and let her gently pet them. A few of her colleagues were so intrigued that they, too, hung feeders outside their windows.

Chainsaw art: Artists use a variety of tools to create their works of art, but Igor Loskutov of Tallinn, Estonia, uses something quite different: chainsaws. For 15 years, he has been using the noisy medium to make life-sized roosters, bears, and bulldogs, which miraculously emerge from pieces of wood. He also makes intricate benches adorned with horses' heads and owls. A recent creation that has attracted attention is a bench that looks like a dragon, with its wings as the back and its tail as an armrest. Loskutov keeps his craft honed by being a member of a traveling chainsaw carving team.

Colorful landscape: There is a park in the province of Ontario (Canada) called Algonquin Provincial Park. Located 275 kilometers (171 miles) north of the city of Toronto, the park's mixed forest turns into a colorful pallet of reds, golds, and yellows when the leaves turn in the fall. The area has provided inspiration for many a landscape painter, and its thousands of lakes draw canoe parties and hikers by the dozens. Boasting 7,600 square kilometers (3,000 sq. mi.) of wilderness, it's a vast park to explore. Visitors could easily run into moose, bear, and other wildlife along their journey.

Seed harvest: Quinoa, an edible seed, has been grown and harvested in Bolivia and Peru for thousands of years and was a main crop of the Incas. Today, it is starting to be known around the world as a protein-rich addition to any diet and can be served in many ways. Quinoa grows on green plants that mature to about one meter (3 ft.) tall. The seeds come from the flower and are ready to be harvested after all the leaves have fallen off the plant. It's easy to just shake the seeds out of the flower top. After harvesting, the seeds are rinsed to remove an outer coating, which is bitter tasting.

Quoteable Quotes

"Memories are our doors of escape, our compensation."
—Dorothy Dix

"To fear the worst oft cures the worst."
—Shakespeare
