Everybody's Talking!

Flying fashion: At fashion shows, spectators expect to see models strutting down the catwalk wearing the latest styles. However, a fashion show that took place in a luxury hotel in the port city of Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, had some people scratching their heads when organizers tried something different. Small drones flew down the runway while holding hangers with clothing. The dresses and skirts fluttered and jiggled, and looked rather odd. The tactic was used partly to showcase the country's technology, but not everyone in the fashion industry liked the effect. Some thought the empty clothing items looked like floating ghosts.

Staring dog: There is a dog in the city of General Roca, Argentina, that inexplicably stared at a blue wall for three days. Onlookers did not know his real name, so they dubbed him "Chicho." The pooch would sit or stand in front of a sky blue wall at a bus stop. It seemed like he was attending to something on the wall, and even though people called him, he persisted, wagging his tail the whole time. He became an online animal celebrity. The owner lives near the bus stop and brought the dog back to his own yard for fear of someone stealing the newly famous pet.

Bad idea: High school graduation planners usually invite live bands as entertainment for the year-end dance. But the folks behind the celebration at Christopher Columbus High School in Miami, Florida (US), are in a bit of trouble after bringing in a live, caged tiger to be the centerpiece, as well as a lemur, a parrot, and a fox. The theme of the prom was "Welcome to the Jungle" and, while legal, there was backlash about the morality of it. Suffice it to say that the students may have learned the most valuable lesson of the year. It's exciting to see exotic animals up close, but animal experts criticize using them as entertainment. Perhaps the school's future grad classes will come up with tamer themes!

Wayward peacock: Rose Botting, who lives in the village of Handcross, West Sussex (England), gets visits from an all-white peacock named "Bertie," whose owner lives in a nearby village. Every mating season, the bird looks for a peahen and tends to visit gardens, hop onto roofs, and generally cause a commotion. Bertie's white feathers are often seen beautifully fanned out, but unfortunately, there aren't any peahens in the vicinity. He also dances the peacock-mating dance, to no avail. Botting used a taped peahen's call to lure Bertie to her home, then she called Bertie's owner, Jo Wilding, who came from her village to pick up the wayward bird.

Lucky numbers this week: This week's odds favor Cancer winners with the luckiest number being 7.

Did You Know...

Lifelong love: Canada geese are a common sight in the skies in North America, especially during their spring and fall migrations in V-shaped flocks. These birds mate for life, but if one partner dies, the mate will find another.

Famous family: English scientist Charles Darwin lived from 1809 to 1882. One of his grandfathers was Josiah Wedgwood, manufacturer of the famous pottery that bears his name.

Long in the tooth: The teeth in fossils can tell archeologists quite a bit about the diets of our human ancestors. For example, the teeth may contain microfossils of what the person was eating, such as fish scales.

Tall peak: The highest mountain in Canada is Mount Logan, located in the Saint Elias Range in the southwestern area of the Yukon. The peak is 5,595 meters (19,551 feet) above sea level. It is named after the founder of the Geological Survey of Canada, Sir William Logan.

Good for you: A mangosteen is a tropical fruit that is about the size of an apple. Sweet when ripe and tart when not, they have great nutritional value. The white flesh inside is segmented like an orange.

On the Lighter Side

What do the moon and false teeth have in common? They both come out at night.

By the time you're about 50, you think you've learned nearly everything about life. But that's when people start talking about machines you've never seen and music you've never heard.

Child: "My teacher was mad because I didn't know where the Rockies were."

Parent: "Well, next time remember where you put things."

Before you say something off the cuff, make sure your shirt is clean.

Do whatever you can to keep a smile on your face. If you can't lift the corners, let the middle sag.
