Everybody's Talking!

Donkey libraries: Luis Soriano became a hero to children in the rural area around La Gloria, Colombia, when he introduced his "Biblioburro," or "donkey libraries." The schoolteacher realized that children in his area couldn't do their homework because they didn't have access to books at home. He decided to bring books to them on the backs of his faithful donkeys, Alfa and Beto (which together spell Alfabeto, Spanish for alphabet). Using adapted packsaddles, Mr. Soriano loads his mobile library onto his donkeys and heads out for deliveries several times a week. Thousands of children have benefited since he began almost three decades ago.

Good graffiti: Graffiti is often frowned upon in urban centers for ruining the architecture. But what if the architecture is already ruined? Street artist Javier de Riba of Barcelona (Spain) brings beauty to abandoned buildings by painting geometric patterns on the floors, resulting in what look like brightly colored tiles in the midst of ruins. His materials of choice are spray paint and stencils of the patterns he wishes to duplicate. When visitors walk into a building that Riba has adorned, they may find what looks like a turquoise and brown tiled floor, a flowered carpet, or a blue, circular-patterned mat beside old bricks and other refuse.

Sleep well: American Luke Mickelson left a thriving career to build bunk beds so kids would have a comfortable place to sleep. The Twin Falls, Idaho, man started building the beds in 2012 when he learned there were youngsters in his community who were sleeping on the floor. He recruited friends to help, and the concept and commitment grew. This motivated him to form a non-profit called Sleep in Heavenly Peace, which he now oversees. The organization has spread to include more than 90 active and planned chapters in 34 states. So far, they have built and given away more than 1,500 beds across the U.S.

Soccer pitch visitor: National Premier League soccer players focusing hard on their game in Australia's capital city suddenly had a visitor. A kangaroo had joined them on the pitch! The animal had hopped the fence and joined the players, watching them from the sidelines. But then the kangaroo bounded onto the field, stopping to take his place in front of the goal. Players made a wide berth around him because the critters have very powerful kicks and punches. Finally, a truck led the creature to the edge of the field and he hopped away to somewhere else in Canberra.

Quoteable Quotes

"Do not seek to follow in the footsteps of the men of old. Seek what they sought." —Matsuo Basho

"The worst sin towards our fellow creatures is not to hate them, but to be indifferent to them: that's the essence of inhumanity." —George Bernard Shaw
