Everybody's Talking!

Lost but found: Carlos Zetina was determined to find a girl named Nicole. The student from the University of Calgary, in western Canada, used the university's directory to send emails to 246 women named Nicole. His goal was to find the one he'd met on campus in a student lounge. She had given him her number, but it was the wrong one. Carlos wanted to find her to see if it was a deliberate error and if it was, he'd leave her alone. He did find her, thanks to another Nicole who created a Facebook page called "Nicole from last night." In more good news, the right Nicole wanted to meet Carlos again. In another twist, the other Nicoles decided to get together to make new friends!

Mushroom shoes: For people looking for sustainable apparel in the form of clothing and footwear made from natural products and recyclable items, the nat-2 "vegan sneaker" seems to hit the mark. These German-designed shoes are made from tinder sponge, which is a parasite growing on dead or weak birch and beech trees. The process to harvest the fungi and prepare it for use takes two years and is no small feat. The shoes are made by hand in a small family-run shop in Italy, and the leather-like material they produce is soft and weathered-looking. The makers combine it with other materials to create their final product.

Silly driver: A man in the city of Nanning, Guangxi (China) was only trying to get social media attention, but his plan backfired when the police stopped him. He had been driving his Mercedes convertible with the top down, which is not an offense. What got him into trouble was that when it started to rain, he didn't put the top up. Instead, he opened a purple umbrella, held it over his head, and continued to drive. Eventually, the police caught up with him, fining him and giving him two demerits on his license. Video of his exploits did go viral on a Chinese social media platform.

Visiting bear: The residents of Canada's capital city of Ottawa, Ontario, are accustomed to seeing lots of tourists, but not usually the four-legged kind. So police were surprised when they got a call saying a bear was roaming one of the city's busiest downtown neighborhoods. It was spotted in the middle of the night, and police immediately cleared the area of people. By morning, they had tranquilized the bear, which fell asleep in a tree. Using a rope, they were able to dislodge the bear safely and transport it out of the city and into its natural habitat.

Did You Know...

Chinese tradition: Chinese New Year celebrations take place for about 15 days and always fall between January 21 and February 20. People gather with their families to share food and to give small presents to each other.

Bee stings: Female honeybees will sting if threatened, but they die after using their stingers. The queen bee can also sting, but she won't die afterwards. Queens don't usually leave the hive, so they aren't likely to sting humans.

Staying alive: Naked mole rats are tiny, hairless rodents. Common in Africa, they live in underground burrows. They have the ability to remain alive underground, without oxygen, for about 18 minutes.

Gold rush: The famed Gold Rush in the United States began in 1848 when flakes of gold were found in the American River, in California, during the building of a sawmill. John Sutter, an immigrant from Europe, and U.S.-born James W. Marshall were the first to find it.

Bounce the ball: Basketball was invented in 1891 by Dr. James Naismith, a Canadian physical education teacher working in Springfield, Massachusetts (US). He was looking for a way to keep his gym students busy on a rainy day. He originally used a soccer ball to play the game.

On the Lighter Side

What was the farmer doing on the other side of the road? Catching all the chickens that had crossed it.

Did you hear about the wizard who directed a film? He really made movie magic.

What's the most dangerous part of a car? The nut that holds the steering wheel.

Hospital: Where you might wind up if you get run down.

The mint is the only business that makes money without advertising.
