Everybody's Talking!

Needlework: Performance art can make a political point, test people's perceptions, or simply try to prove that something can be done. For Sven Sachsaler, an Italian performance artist, the latter was the reason for a recent show that took place at the Palais de Tokyo contemporary art space in Paris, France. Sachsaler wanted to test the old adage: "It's like trying to find a needle in a haystack." So, he actually put a needle in a haystack and then went about trying to find it. The artist would work for up to 12 hours before taking a long break, but in the end, he found the elusive needle, to the amazement of those following his show.

Long light: There is a light bulb hanging from a ceiling in a fire station in California (US), that has been in operation since 1901. Fire Station No. 6 in Livermore is the home of the special bulb, which is on 24 hours a day. Physicist Debora Katz, of the US Naval Academy, explains that the bulb is made differently than most incandescent bulbs. For example, its filament is much thicker than normal bulbs. The bulb has been off during power outages over the years and it had to be turned off when it was moved from one station to another in 1976. No one knows if and when it will ever become inoperable.

Love notes: A couple from New Jersey (US), hopes their story will inspire young couples to pay attention to each other, instead of constantly looking into their phones and computer screens. Bill Bresnan's actions, over the last 40 years, may do just that. He has sent his wife, Kirsten, a love note almost every day of their marriage. Sometimes the note is on a postcard from his travels, other times it's on a napkin, and occasionally it's just on a scrap of paper. The couple recently organized all of these notes (over 10,000 of them), and they now act as a kind of diary of their love for each other and their life together.

Low-cost home: A British man from Oxfordshire, England, built a house for next to nothing by using materials from nature and second-hand items. It's not exactly like a normal house in Britain, but it is certainly a house that one can comfortably live in. Its owner, Michael Buck, claims he has proven that it's not necessary to spend "an arm and a leg" to own a home. His little 'Hobbit' house has a thatched roof and a floor made of sand, clay, earth, and water. The windows were cut from an old truck's front window. There is running water obtained through a pipe from a stream and a wood stove is used for heat.

Quoteable Quotes

"Wit is a sword; it is meant to make people feel the point as well as see it."
- G. K. Chesterton

"Sometimes it's the people you can't help who inspire you the most."
- Melinda Gates
