Everybody's Talking!

Glowing Lake: Curious chemical reactions can cause soda pop to fizz, metal to rust and even entire lakes to glow blue. Victoria, Australia, is home to the Gippsland Lakes which, for a couple of summers, sported a blue glow at night. An unlikely combination of forest fires and flooding caused the flow of nitrogen-rich soil into the lakes. This key component, mixed with the hot summer temperatures and local algae, caused the rare reaction that made the lake glow. With the algae feeding on the extra nutrients, they became bioluminescent. The glowing blue lake attracted traveling photographers who wanted to capture this rare gift from Mother Nature.

Jailbird mug shot: When convicts escape from prison, the first thing on their minds, usually, is keeping a low profile. Not so for a young woman named Amy Sharp, who was a prisoner in a Sydney, Australia, correctional facility. In an attempt to track her down, police sent out a bulletin with her mug shot. Amy saw the news release about her jailbreak, but wasn't pleased with how she looked in the photo. So, she made a request on a news service's Facebook page asking the authorities to replace her photo with a better one, which she provided. Apparently, even jailbirds like to look their best!

Broken spell: It seems that fortunetellers in Spain not only predict people's futures, but they also cast spells to make their predictions come true. But what if a spell doesn't work? A fortuneteller in the municipality of Magallon discovered that some clients can get quite angry. Psychic Lucia Martin charged lovesick businessman Jose Laparra more than $200,000 for a spell that was supposed to bring back his lost love. When Laparra's love interest didn't come running back to him, he broke into Martin's house to get his money back. Psychic that she is, Martin anticipated the break-in, called the cops, and Laparra was caught in the act. Apparently, some spells are meant to be broken.

Fun with garbage: Picking up other people's trash may not be the most satisfying job in the world, but one garbage man in Wellington, New Zealand, wanted to have some fun on the job. As the owner of a monkey mask, this trash collector started putting it on when picking up the garbage at a daycare center. The children love it! They await his arrival each week so they can wave at the "garbage monkey," who looks like a gorilla in a bright orange suit. The kids greet him with their own homemade monkey masks, along with plates of cookies. The daycare staff also enjoy the weekly appearance of this creative and fun-loving character.

Did You Know...

Well-traveled: Charles Darwin, nineteenth-century British naturalist and author of On the Origin of Species, sailed to four continents on the H.M.S. Beagle (1831-1836). During his journey, he studied the flora and fauna. He and his wife Emma, who was his first cousin, had ten children.

High-end loo: Some fancy mansions might have expensive bathrooms with gold-plated toilet seats. But that's not nearly as expensive as the toilet on the International Space Station, which cost about $19 million (US).

Diverse country: Venezuela has two seasons: rainy and dry. The tropical country is home to many rare animals and plants, such as the Merida Brocket deer and Fernandez's sword-nosed bat.

Currency exchange: Some countries have their own currency, such as the Canadian dollar and the Mexican peso. Other countries share currency, such as the euro in the European Union and the East Caribbean dollar.

Spice from the islands: Some Westerners love the flavor of nutmeg in pumpkin pie, but in cuisines around the world, nutmeg flavors meat dishes, soups, and even ice cream. Nutmeg grows on trees indigenous to the islands of Indonesia, and is not harvested until seven to nine years after the tree is planted.

On the Lighter Side

Joe: "Why did you put your watch in the bank?"
Moe: "I'm trying to save time."

Attention counterfeiters! Never keep the first dollar you made. It could be used as evidence against you!

How hot was it? It was so hot a dog chased a cat and they both walked.

My doctor told me to give up drinking, smoking, and fatty foods. So I think I'll give up my doctor.

Why did the surfer wear a baseball glove? Because he wanted to catch a wave.
