Everybody's Talking!

Hidden homes: There is a hidden spot in the mountains of southeastern Spain that is home to a nearly invisible community. Over a 10-year period, English photographer Ben Murphy photographed the area, known as The Riverbed. Murphy had to build trust with the inhabitants, who live in makeshift homes ranging from old vans to mud and straw huts. The folks in the commune come from different parts of the world, and most just want to live a simple life. The alternative lifestyle attracts different people, ranging from single mothers to couples from wealthy backgrounds, who stay for varying lengths of time. It's not for everyone, but it's an interesting subculture of society.

Fine dining: A chef from Panama is giving his restaurant customers a fine dining experience using local and traditional ingredients in his cooking. Mario Castellón cooks up a tropical fern called kalalu, a palm flower called boda, and wild red rice, among many other delicacies. Castellón has been so successful that his Panama City restaurant, called Maito, was named as one of the top 50 restaurants in Latin America. His goals include using sustainably harvested ingredients and ensuring the empowerment of indigenous farmers.

Excellent health: The Tsimané are an indigenous group of people who live on an Amazon River tributary in Bolivia. According to research published in the medical journal The Lancet, the Tsimané people may be among the healthiest on Earth. As hunter-gatherers, they are active four to seven hours every day, and they eat a diet that is low in fat, sugar, and processed foods. For the study, doctors examined 705 individuals. They were found to be five times less likely to have heart disease than the average American.

Old marsupial: Sleepy Burrows Wombat Sanctuary, near Canberra, Australia, recently became home for an old male wombat who had been kicked out of his wild territory by another dominant male. These marsupials, who are native to Australia, grow to be about one meter (40 in.) long. When a male is injured, he tries to find a safe place; this old fellow ended up under the porch of a couple's home in New South Wales. The couple called Sleep Burrows, and Donna Steppan came to rescue the hungry and dehydrated animal. Steppan was surprised that the wombat had made it to such a ripe old age, as males don't usually live that long in the wild.

Quoteable Quotes

"In my experience, there is only one motivation, and that is desire. No reasons or principle contain it or stand against it."
—Jane Smiley

"Don't be afraid to feel as angry or as loving as you can, because when you feel nothing, it's just death."
—Lena Horne
