Everybody's Talking!

Airport error: Most people are well aware that international airports are restricted areas. However, Gregory Burnes didn't seem to realize that taking a shortcut across a busy runway is illegal. When police caught and arrested him on the airport property, Burnes said he couldn't read the Keep Out signs. That excuse didn't sit well with the officers because several airport personnel said they had given him verbal warnings to get off Runway 9. The trespasser was charged with unlawful entry to restricted areas.

Wallaby wanderer: A wallaby that accidentally found itself on the Harbour Bridge in Sydney, Australia, is lucky to be alive. The little animal hopped across the busy bridge, not quite knowing where to go next. Luckily, police were able to capture the critter and take him to the Taronga Wildlife Hospital. Called "Syd" by the folks at the hospital, the distressed animal was given medication to calm him down, and in the next few days was moved to an outdoor pen. Within nine days, Syd's caretakers felt he was well enough to be released back into the wild at the Ku-Ring-Gai National Park, north of Sydney.

Sleeping burglar: If you're going to get away with burglarizing someone's house, it's best to do it on a full stomach when you're wide-awake. At least that's what a burglar in Coatsbridge, Lanarkshire (Scotland), should have done. The would-be thief broke into a home and, presumably because he was hungry and tired, ate a couple of pieces of pie, grabbed a bag of chips, and fell asleep. The homeowner woke up to find the thief conked out and covered with flavored tortilla chips. He called the police, who came and cuffed the fellow before he could wake up and figure out what had happened.

Swinging bridge: The city of Vancouver, British Columbia (Canada), is home to the world famous Capilano Suspension Bridge. It was originally built out of hemp in 1889, by a Scottish engineer named George Grant Mackay. Upgraded several times over the decades, its span is 450 feet (137 meters) wide and hangs 230 feet (70 m.) above the Capilano River. Visitors from around the world come to take a wobbly walk on this high bridge. At certain times of the year, the bridge and the surrounding area are lit with strings of lights, making for a breathtaking, after-dark experience.

"You will never be alone with a poet in your pocket."

Did You Know...

On the streets: English writer George Orwell (1903-1950) wrote the famous novels Animal Farm and 1984. He once lived as a homeless person, for a time, so he could understand what it was like to live without material wealth.

Swamp creature: Alligators and crocodiles have a cousin called the caiman, or cayman, that lives in the swamps and marshes in Central and South America. Depending on the species, caimans can be 1.2 to 4.5 meters (3.9 to 14.8 feet) in length. These reptiles are amphibious carnivores.

Healthy eating: Cantaloupe, that large, round, rough-skinned fruit with orange flesh inside, has lots of vitamin A, and you can eat a large amount of it without gaining weight. Half a cup has only 27 calories and about 0.15 grams of fat.

Perfect pastime: The popular children's board game Candy Land was invented by American Eleanor Abbott in the early 1940s, as a way to occupy children who were sick with polio. The game was inducted into the National Toy Hall of Fame in 2005.

Expensive outfits: Clothing worn in films by famous actors can fetch a large amount of money at auctions. For example, the racing silks worn by young American actress Elizabeth Taylor in National Velvet (1944) sold for $60,000 USD.

On the Lighter Side

It's always good when the TV report is pessimistic about the weather. People feel so good when it's wrong!

Professor: "Every time I lecture about ancient Rome I get the hiccups."
Student: "I guess that proves that history does repeat itself."

Dolphins are so smart. It only takes them a week to train someone to stand by the side of the pool and throw fish at them.

Why is an elephant so wrinkled? Because it's too big to fit on an ironing board.

Life may not be all you want, but it's all you have.
