Everybody's Talking!

Pizza scam: Lawyer Guido Grolle is tired of pizza. That's because 100 of them have been sent to his law office in Dortmund (Germany) over a two-week period, even though he didn't order them. And they keep coming. Grolle has no idea who is sending the pizzas. The prank interferes with his work because of all the text alerts from pizza restaurants to confirm the orders. Police have investigated to no avail, computer experts have ruled out a virus, and Grolle doesn't know of any clients who would be out to get him. If the perpetrator is caught, he or she could possibly be charged with stalking.

Cat story: It's distressing when a pet gets lost, but there is always hope that the furry family member will be found. Sometimes that hope pays off. Sean, Stephanie, and Emily Tuttle lost Raja, their cat, when they were living in the state of Florida (US). After the feline went missing, the family moved to the state of Virginia. After thinking they'd never see Raja again, they were surprised and thrilled when, three years after Raja's disappearance, an animal shelter in a third state, Delaware, called to say that he had been found alive and well. The shelter employees were able to trace Raja's owners through information on his microchip.

Pile of coins: Although Germany uses the euro, some Germans still have pfennig coins in their possession. Pfennigs are equal to one hundredth of a mark, the old German currency. A man in the town of Bremervörde spent his lifetime collecting more than a million of these coins for his family. When he died, the family was allowed to exchange the pfennigs for euros. However, it took bank clerk Wolfgang Kermereit 700 hours during six months to count the coins by hand, as they were too damaged to run through a coin counting machine. In the end, the stash of coins amounted to €8,000.

Unwrapped gift: When Adrian Pearce was seventeen years old, his girlfriend broke up with him just before the Christmas season. But first, she gave him a Christmas present. Now, almost 50 years later, the man in Edmonton, Alberta (Canada), still has the gift, which he never unwrapped. He is not sure why he kept it, but he brings it out every Christmas to have a look. He married someone else years ago. Pearce might decide to break the decades-old tradition by opening the gift on the 50th anniversary of receiving it. He may even have a contest where people pay a fee to guess what's inside, with the proceeds going to charity.

"Some say life is the thing, but I prefer reading." —Ruth Rendell
