Everybody's Talking!

Unique discovery: At least 300 ancient Roman coins were found in a jar in the basement of an old theater in Como, Lombardy (Italy). The coins date to the late Roman imperial era. While their historical and cultural significance is yet to be determined, the find has created excitement for Italy's Ministry of Cultural Heritage and Activities. The coins were stacked in rolls inside the jar and have engravings of emperors predating 474 CE. The theater in which the coins were found opened in 1807 and closed in 1997. The coins could be worth millions.

Cute pooches: A Japanese dog groomer is making a name for herself thanks to her delightful results. Yoriko Hamachiyo has a knack for turning ordinary pooches into extraordinary ones with her whimsical and artistic talents. For example, she has made fluffy dogs look like sheep and punk rockers. She works mainly with small dogs, spending at least two hours with her four-legged clients, and she likes to post photos of her finished products. Her salon is called Yorikokoro. One of her most well-known success stories was the transformation of a teacup poodle into a perfectly shaped ball of fluff.

Pizza tats: The Russian branch of a pizza chain issued a call to people interested in some unique advertising. Anyone who got a tattoo of the chain's logo would receive 100 pizzas a year, for life. The promoters didn't expect a huge response, but that's what they got. Pictures of people's new tattoos, along with their claims for free pizza, came in by the dozens! Finally, the chain had to limit the contest to the first 350 entrants, and establish rules about the size of the tattoo and the permitted locations on the body. Hopefully, when the contest was cancelled, participants who hadn't yet been inked were able to cancel their tattoo appointments.

Unique customer: At a farm supply store in Elk City, Oklahoma (U.S.), pets are allowed inside if they're on a leash. The policy means that store staff are accustomed to seeing dogs and other small animals accompany their owners on their shopping trips. However, employees did a double take when a shopper came into the store holding his horse by the reins. The man was dressed in a cowboy hat, chaps, and boots. It wasn't a prank because the man had asked permission from the manager before leading his "pet" into the store. Witnesses reported that the horse looked like he was a seasoned shopper.

Did You Know...

Ripe melon: To know if a honeydew melon is ripe, look for a rind that is whitish or golden, rather than green. If shaken, the seeds in a ripe melon will make a faint rattling sound.

Tiny cats: Those little cats that never seem to grow up are known as "perma-kittens." They are pretty cute, but they actually aren't very healthy. They are small because they have a genetic disorder that causes them to have mobility and neurological problems.

Beekeeping: In Slovenia, beekeeping is one of the oldest traditional crafts and an important industry. The Carniolan honeybee, known for its docility and hard work, is the species bred to produce the country's honey.

Sweet and tangy: Tamarind is a fruit that looks more like a bean than a fruit. Tamarind pods grow on trees. Inside the pods is the sticky fruit that tastes both tangy and sweet.

Notes and more: Singing involves much more than a range of notes. Singers also consider things like timbre, which is unique voice quality and texture, as well as tessitura, which is the part of the range that is the most comfortable for the singer.

On the Lighter Side

Teacher: "It's clear you haven't studied your geography. What's your excuse?"

Pupil: "Grown-ups say the world is changing every day, so I decided to wait until it settles down."

Jesse: "How did you like the ballet?"

Jordan: "I don't understand all that toe dancing. Why don't they just get taller dancers?"

What kind of fish do you eat with peanut butter? Jellyfish.

Why does history keep repeating itself? Because we weren't listening the first time.

If a fool and his money are soon parted, how did the fool get his money in the first place?
